AFRIC STOWAWAY HERE

BUT FOR ONE DAY ONLY—EDWARD DAY GOT ON SWEDISH STEAMSHIP IN AFRICA BOUND FOR BOSTON—SENT BACK TO NEW YORK AFTER VISITING TREMONT STREET SEVERAL HOURS

Saturday night was a great time for Edward Day of Freetown, Africa. He had reached the United States, seen it and its tall buildings for himself. He reached Boston Saturday as a stowaway, and was granted a few hours ashore, whereby he was able to visit Tremont Street and eat at Lucas' lunch counter before being turned to New York to be shipped back.

A desire to come to America and see at close range the "big houses," of which he had heard and seen pictures, prompted Edward Day, 17, a native African youth, to stow away on board the Swedish steamship Astrand, while she was at Freetown, on the West African coast, enroute to Boston from ports on the Congo and the Gold Coast.

Ten hours after the ship had started, and with this port as the next stop, Edward made his appearance on the bridge deck, confronting Captain Huldgtren that night. He did not say where he had spent the day, but after questioning disclosed why he had decided to make the trip. After viewing the skyscrapers in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, the lad intended to settle down in one of these cities.

His dreams and plans were given a rude jolt, however, when he was taken to the immigration station, and after a hearing ordered deported.
